

Lavender-Blu

As an artisan Mila Haynos-Owen has chosen a somewhat unprecedented medium – lavender. This ancient herb of a very versatile nature is one which for centuries has been utilized in many different art forms and due to its well-known scent, adds an appealing artistic dimension.

The versatility of lavender is so broad that it touches many artisanal avenues: ceramics, weaving, painting, photography, the art of distillation, landscape design, culinary arts, aromatherapy, flower arranging and horticulture to name a few. Therefore, running a lavender artisan studio encompasses a broad spectrum of these avenues with the lavender acting as the keystone and binding thread.

Technically Mila operates two studios, one being the farm garden where she currently tends to over 700 lavender plants, as well as an artisan studio based on the farm property. In her Lavender-Blu artisan studio Mila works with textiles, wool fibres, water colours, clay, raw organic substances, aromatic essential oils, fresh pliable lavender as well as the dried lavender buds to create affordable and utilitarian lavender artisan products. In addition, she provides workshop space in order to present visitors with the opportunity to become active members in creating their own ‘piece of lavender art’. This is a lovely journey as spectators and onlookers suddenly become participants. This is the art of lavender.
